Introducing the TRA

A transportation reimbursement account (TRA) is a personal expense account that allows you to set aside a portion of your salary pretax reducing your taxable income.¹ You can use that money to pay for transportation and parking expenses related to commuting to and from work.

¹ Please consult your tax advisor with questions.

What you need to know about TRAs

You decide monthly how much to contribute to pay for work-related commuting expenses.

The amount you select is withheld pretax from your pay in equal portions throughout the month and put into your TRA.

Unused money from your TRA will roll over from month to month.

Pay for your commute and parking tax-free

All systems go!

Use your TRA for these:

- Bus, ferry, train, trolley tickets and passes
- Parking expenses near work or location providing mass transit:
 - Meters
 - Garages
 - Lots
 - Secure bicycle storage
- Vanpool fees (Including UberPool and Lyft Line)

Heads up!

You can't use your TRA for these:

- Tolls
- Taxis
- Gas and mileage
- Airport parking fees

TRA contribution limits

The IRS places limits on how much you can save for transportation tax-free. This is the most you can withhold from your check.
